Compound 57 showed a significant increase in performance of subjects to whom it was administered, but they continue to perform uniformly sub-par when compared with results of psychic subjects. (With the obvious exception of subject 122-Omega.)

Near to comparable results have been obtained with the tri-series compounds, though this series was abandoned due to their reliance on psyker genetic material, and thus their deviation from the purpose of the trials.

Subject 439 has shown more promise than other candidates, his measurements, particularly in the areas which most interest Sovereign Quietus Cale, the breaching portal. However, the theory that 439 was a deeply nascent psyker cannot be ignored. Quietus Cale has taken subject 439 off planet for more thorough and personal testing.

Psychic subjects seems to be burning out in an increasingly short span of time. Is this because test subjects are creating increased competition, or some other variable not accounted for?
